Perhaps Sydney Water would begin to charge for water usage rather than water connection. They do not read the consumption of water in unit blocks for individual units, rather they just charge for the whole block. This encourages wasteful consumption of water. Similarly even for a residential property the main charge is for the connection and not the consumption. I own two houses. In the main one I consume water with gardens, toilets, showers etc. In the other, during some quarters, I consume zero water at all, yet the water bills for both houses is only about $40 different. Charge for consumption rather than the connection as it encourages wasting water. The advertisements encouraging to use less water are meaningless while excess consumption is encouraged.
