

Author name: Anonymous

Date of submission: Saturday, July 18, 2015

Submission: The city of Sydney council itself has a lot of development application to go through and if they can't manage that properly it would be even impossible to manage developments of such a huge area. The mega council would mean a need for larger and more efficient management systems. Instead of combining, the current councils should work together in unifying planning modules and reviewing them regularly to ensure consistencies in development standards. The notion of a city is its people, and the wellbeing of the people comes from systematic and effective planning and management.