Why must Sydney residents have to pay more for water? I understand Sydneys population is growing and further infrastructure is required. This sounds like a price gouging scheme employed by all the major corporations here in Australia. As Sydneys population grows, so will Sydney waters profits, even if prices remain the same. Infrastructure will be required to meet the needs of this growing population as government must take into consideration when planning growth. Much of the growth areas of Sydney are always hurried through approval with little or no infrastructure, further hindering new residents once they settle. This appears to be the same practice being employed by Sydney Water. Like any business, expansion should be factored into the business model, not simply raise prices to pay for it. Hawkesbury residents have been fighting to have Warragambas dam wall raised for decades, to not only stop the flooding of their land, but to increase the volume therefore supply of Sydneys water. Nothing has ever been done. Instead an expensive desalination plant was built, supplying only 15% of Sydneys water. Do not raise prices on already struggling Sydney residents,
