Hi The way that price is structured is favouring the rich people and high usage users. The reason is that the fixed price is very high. If someone is tries to save water, there is no incentive. Changes should be on the fixed price where it should be lowered. Those low usage users will benefit. It will give people the incentive not to use a lot of water or install water tanks to save water. On the other hand, those people who is on low income or health care card is not getting any concession. I suggest this needs to be changed to include low income earners of health care card holders. Thirdly, it should encourage double pipes system so that toilet flushing can use salt water from the ocean. This will save Sydney water to purify water but is then used for flushing toilet. Thank you Eddy
