No. The current care allowance is most certainly not enough. There has been a price increase on absolutely everything. Extra curricular activities cost more. We are spending more on fuel, food and family outings. While the current subsidy does help, it barely makes a dent in how much is needed to actually care for a child on a daily basis. This is just a mention of the basics. When the child is ill, or grows (which they're constantly doing), we are paying for medical fees, new clothing, shoes, toys and other necessities to keep the child comfortable, happy and fulfilling all the basic needs.
