Firstly, I understand prices require to be increased, however with the levels they are being increased by does not seem justifiable. Without a pension a minimal increase is near $700 per household. Estimating over $5.5Billion increase for the first year alone. If Sydney water has not maintained its assets over the years, then how has the business maintained its Capital and operational costs for the past several years. If this was to go through, I would expect to see a restructure on existing field staff and office staff to ensure they are performing throughout the day. Additionally, I would expect the business would not be handing out bonus to any employee, and ensure the CEO's salary is in line with how the business has successfully completed Capital and Maintain the network, opposed to how much money they can drain out of the working-class residence of Greater Sydney,
