Apart from feeling appalled that a city with a population of more than 5 million, have to find money, MORE money, for an organisation that doesn't have an impressive record of service, that can't understand and manage the simple cycle of floods and droughts in this city, as elsewhere in this country (add 'cyclonic' weather that our sub-tropical city receives periodically), I am also wondering if we will ever USE the expensive DESALINATION PLANT?????!!!!!! The desalination plant sits dormant, right? Corporatisation is usually another name for greed. Cannot reform be done more inexpensively and simply by connecting the lines with what already exists and being more intelligent and practical in how things get done ...? Think. Address. Apply. Home-owners are not a bottomless pit. We might need to go back to tank water... Investigate pipelines that are likely ageing and needing replacement before they burst. Think. Address. Apply. Cost-effectively. What did the ancient Romans do?
