Submission: We, my wife and I invested our pension savings as part of a plan to save outgoings in our retirement at the time all Government bodies encouraged people to invest in clean power and save on electricity bills. In addition it was stated by the Governments that by doing so it would help towards cutting back greenhouse effects. We believed what was advertised and invested our pension in what we believed the Governments were informing us of what savings and environmental structures they required and the future benefits to us as old age pensioners. We could have invested the outlay had we believed that the Governments were going to overturn their promises. In the long run the interest gathered from the monies invested would have assisted in paying our electricity bills. Instead we are faced with the extra burden of not having the monies invested in solar as advised by the Governments and future debt. If they paid us a fair price for our solar generation then the investment in solar will be of financial assistance in our old age as we do not work to accumulate monies for on going debts. Solar was part of our retirement plan and the Governments that encouraged us to do so are going back on their word. Please give solar investors a fair price for our investments. We believed in you at the time and parted with our monies.
