Submission: Well we live in rural Mid North Coast of NSW. We have a 2 woolworths and a couple of smaller supermarkets in a 20 km radius. Our closet NSW Container Deposit Scheme is over 50km. Our prices for drinks have increased greatly but have no access for getting a refund. I would have thought it would make sense for the govt to install smaller machines or even just deposit bins in rural areas for people to place there containers and dont allow the big supermarkets to increase there prices. There the only ones making money out of this, they get to increase prices across the board in every store full well knowing customers have no way of getting a refund on bottles, so they are making 5 to 10 cents on each can and bottle sold. And realistically have it on all types of bottles and cans, there is so much restriction on types of bottles. I have heard if your bottle has the barcode where they havent charged you extra you get rejected. If its really about recycling it should be on all glass and plastic, why not have it set up in council tips, at least everyones has access to tips. Why cant you use the old system about 40 years ago where you could return your bottles to stores and get an instant refund of 5 or 10 cents depending on the bottle and the shops collected them. How does SA residents get the refund on their bottles.
