Renewable energy sources are readily available in Australia, and the government should be providing citizens with incentives to make the switch. We need to look after our environment for the sake of our children and generations to come. To make this happen, we need to see:

- a fair price for solar energy that provides an incentive for those who can, to install solar energy
- regulate a minimum benchmark price for feed-in tariffs, to reduce dependency on others in the population on non-renewable, high polluting energy sources
- actively promote solar as a viable energy solution
