Look Government Guys you are being completely stupid. By keeping tariffs so low you are putting sensible people with solar panels into a position where they will have no option but to get batteries with which to store their excess power. And what will happen then? The grid loses out, and before you know it there will be an end to central generation of electricity...
But what if you offered 40c per kWh? In no time at all you could close down most of your dirty generating plants and distribute all that excess, because people would put up more and more panels... no more expensive transmission (with all those power losses), no more dirty electricity.
You know it makes sense. But you won't do it because you are in the pockets of coal and generators...
