Author name: M. Hansen

Date of submission: Thursday, 2 May 2019

Submission: I'd love to have zone-based fares, that don't matter whether you're taking bus or train.

Today, taking a bus to a train station is penalized - you have to pay much more than if you just train. Despite it being much better for society for you to take that bus to connect with the train.

I think fares should be much higher during the rush hour, to encourage flexible folks to take the train at other times. And at other times, the cost should be as close to free as we can. This would help smooth load and scale our system better.