

Author name: N. Miletich

Date of submission: Thursday, 3 May 2018

Submission: "Why should I be slugged for helping drive down the wholesale price of electricity?

Why should I again be slugged for my capital outlay to install solar panels that have helped stabilise the grid on hot, sunny days, ultimately saving the power generators/distributors millions?

The power retailers already make obscene profits off every kWh I pump into the grid, paying me 11c per kWh and charging my neighbour 28c per kWh, all without them incurring any risk or outlaying a single cent in capital expenditure?

If the price should move, it should increase rather than decrease.

Why should the profits of such large companies be further subsidised by my personal capital expenditure?

Get a grip people."