Submission: I am about to have solar panels installed on my house roof. My motivation for spending this considerable amount of my severely limited resources is that I am convinced that the future of electricity supply lies with renewables, and that the days of environmentally dangerous fossil fuels are over. Electricity suppliers and distributors need to make their contribution to the energy revolution by encouraging the move towards sanity that I and millions more Australian householders are making. They should not be pocketing the profits made by the huge differential between the price they pay and the price they receive for electricity supply. A fair return for our investment is all we are asking.
