

Author name: T. McKell

Date of submission: Tuesday, 8 May 2018

Submission: I'm no environmental scientist, but I find it hard to believe how beaches estate think it is in anyway acceptable to pump treated sewage, better known as 'effluent' into a creek that breaks its banks whenever it rains, and runs out into the ocean a mere 50 meters away from the south end patrolled swimming area at Catherine hill bay. They say this water is safe for anything but drinking and bathing, but if millions of liters of this treated effluent are running directly into the patrolled swimming area of a popular beach, then that sounds very much like bathing in it to me.