

SUBMISSION TO IPART REVIEW
SOLAR FEED-IN TARIFFS 2017/18

Friday, 19 May 2017

1:04:07 PM

The respected person,

When I agreed to accept sun-powered era, I wanted to make a difference and I believed that the government was also trying to make Australia sustainable. After the end of the tariff support by the government it has set me in reverse. Today the entire world is taking a gander at sustainability. It is extremely terrible that the entire world is taking a gander at progressing and we are adhered attempting to work out how to value the feed in tariff. China is embracing electric vehicle and solar sustainability which I observed from my recent visit. India is targeting to move ahead with only electric car sold by 2030. Here we are attempting to work out climate the organizations can nullify the eventual fate of Australian sustainability. This must come from top down and not from the middle. Australia is currently being deserted in the race of advancing for the eventual fate of sustainability. The feed in tariff is something for the government to intervene not left to a punt by the retailer. This is clean energy that is being supplied to the retailers at next to nothing. Every single one of the retailers opted to pay $0.06 cents for 1kwh and under, this ought to give you a thought where they would like to take sustainability as well. There is far more noteworthy work required for our regarded nation to set a point of reference that would have a cutting-edge impact for our people and kids. Your organisation as regulators must have the capacity to cast vision for Australia's future generation. If so what might you want to accomplish for your nation? I trust the jury to decide wisely with that since I can't put a $ esteem for our future and surely clean energy deserves better merits preferable incentive over the what the retailers are pitching it to clients. This will have an impact in sustainability by and large the choices that your association makes will shape the future of the nation.

Timothy Naraiyanansamy

Postcode: 2210