

Author name: Anonymous

Date of submission: Tuesday, 2 February 2016

Submission: Dear Members of the Independent Pricing and Regulatory Tribunal,

There are many people who have retired and have limited superannuation funds and we as a nation should be encouraging them to travel and get about this wonderful country. Women are typically hardest hit as they have the lowest amounts of income in their superannuation accounts.

There is so much to explore in Australia and by travelling to visit friends and relatives it is good for the mental and physical well being of its residents. Increasing the rate for seniors to travel would be a disincentive and lead to poorer health outcomes and more obesity. Seniors have made this country great and most have worked many years paying taxes and raising children. Please reconsider the need to remove the $2.00 travel for this group of Australians. We know that many are living in poverty due to increasing costs of living, which includes increasing taxes and rates. Please consider reducing the amount of tax free income wealthy people can put into their superannuation as another option to save money.

Your faithfully