Submission: I write in protest about the impending state government decision to cancel the $2.50 public transport ticket for seniors in favour of higher charges. This is a mean policy that will disadvantage many. It is also short-sighted: any financial advantages will be comprehensively overthrown by the resultant lack of goodwill among a large portion of the community. It's always bad policy to take away a benefit.

It seems lunatic that when Sydney traffic is already so bad, this government is punishing people who depend on public transport. I suppose all those unnecessary roads have to be paid for, however.
