

Author name: Anonymous

Date of submission: Thursday, 4 February 2016

Submission: The proposal to restrict the gold opal card is petty and small minded. Many of the people you seek to penalise are just above the pension cut off rate and do not have the luxury of earning additional money to cover additional costs. Millionaires tend not to use public transport. This age range is the one most likely to be doing voluntary work and additional costs may stop them from performing this valuable community service. Other countries provide free travel for those who are retired, yet this proposal could result in further isolation of the most vulnerable in our community. If we have super it is because we have worked and paid taxes for 40 plus years. Public transport has to run, why try and make it run empty, or is this just an excuse to further cut services?