Submission: As a family of 4 and stay at home mother, I really enjoyed taking my kids out on Sunday with the current $2.50 daily cap. I believe it is a good measure to encourage people (especially families) to go out during the weekend, not have to drive, and helps with utilising the train service a little bit more whilst train services need to run anyway regardless the trains are full or not.

Why now, it has to be taken away? How is that going to still encourage people to go out and not drive? And what has changed anyway, did you provide more trains services since, that we have to contribute to the cost? The trains already run very infrequently during the weekends, not to mention all the trackworks that goes on almost every weekend on one track or the other causing inconvenience to the passengers!
