Submission: Dear Sir/Madam, My wife and I are retired senior citizens who have both worked for 40 years and paid considerable income and other taxes during our life. We do not receive any government pension of any type and look to be self-supporting by relying upon our diminishing own superannuation accounts to meet ever increasing costs of living. We consider the current $2.50 daily travel concession pass for seniors as about the only reasonable benefit we receive in our retirement years and would consider it totally unreasonable to now withdraw this one benefit and increase the daily fare for each of us to $9.00. The travel concession does allow us to take our grandchildren out on occasions as we look after them as part of our commitment to family and society more generally.
