The government (via IPART) should compel energy companies here that starting this winter they must write to every customer once a year to inform them of the current cheapest energy deal available. This may put an end to the hundreds of tariffs that are currently available. It should be pointed out that unless you have an internet connection and can pay by direct bank transfer you will not be able to take advantage of the cheapest offers. The poorest in our society may well be excluded from these deals. Ian Mann Goulburn NSW
