Submission: As a GP I have concerns that the increase in the daily cost of the Opal card for non pensioners, many of whom are also on low incomes, will have the effect of reducing many activities which are very important for their mental and physical health eg attending fitness groups and other classes and also socialising with friends. They also may be forced to shop at local more expensive businesses rather than travel further afield to access cheaper outlets. With the current inflow of revenue from the real estate boom this increase in cost would seem to be unnecessary
