

Author name: P. Bosmia

Date of submission: Wednesday, 13 January 2016

Submission: Living in large city mean living far from the commercial hub due to housing availability and affordability. Constantly penalising customer travelling large distances around 30kms to 50kms range using only one form of transport I.e to work is unfair.

As it stands the fare are already expensive for peak travel which is the only option for most of people due to office work hours constraint. Rather than making is cheaper for certain scenarios why make look at Singapore pricing structure and learn how to make a standard affordable fare for every trip or even introduce monthly pass for point A to B for unlimited travel to make it cheaper and better for all.

public transport should be affordable and end of costing safe and driving then what's the point.

Very disappointed with proposed fare hike specially for inner west commuters. This is not fair dinkum.

Pavan