Submission: Please continue rewarding the public transport using commuters in the current way, that is to say, 8 paid trips followed by 2 free ones across a standard 5 day working week. Let's face it, the NSW Government has invested in a costly advertising campaign targeting commuters with the message that patience during the transport infrastructure upgrades would be appreciated. The road closures and associated delays have been extremely frustrating and fraught with inconvenience, so a little benevolence would be greatly appreciated. Sydney traffic is laughable in its current incarnation, so why discourage people from using public transport by way of increased fares? You know the roads can't handle even more cars if they are already bursting at the seams...
