

Author name: R. O'Reilly

Date of submission: Tuesday, 2 February 2016

Submission: It is an appalling injustice that seniors should have to pay more for their travel.

If the government policy it to encourage public transport usage and minimise the number of cars on the road all seniors need to be compensated for the inconvenience of leaving their cars at home.

Capped fares make it possible for all seniors to enjoy outings instead of vegetating at home thinking about how little money they have to live on in an already expensive city.

What is open to seniors in the way of entertainment that is not costly?

Not much!

Why strip away the enjoyment of travel locally and more widely as a pastime that encourages engagement with others?

An alternative to going to the club and playing poker machines is needed.

It is imperative that the older generation is looked after even if they can look after themselves to some degree- they have paid taxes all their lives and now often have the burden of helping their children and grandchildren in this climate of expensive living in Sydney

Don't take this away- you too will be old!