Submission: As an aged pensioner with a terminal illness, I have almost daily requirements to make the bus trips to doctors, therapy, hospitals etc.

I have been coming to terms with the fact I am no longer capable of driving as I used to and am much more dependent on public transport or asking friends to transport me.

The fact that I have to make so many trips is already a burden without now having to contemplate a 40% increase in the daily fare.

Generally speaking, I consider the increase will be an incentive for a number of my older friends to stay home and not to meet so often for routine outings

Please reconsider the Opal fares for seniors
