I consider myself relatively new when it comes to public transport as I have had only had to take the train since I started my job in North Sydney six months ago, but during this time I have seen nothing during this time to warrant a fare increase.

Where in the world is being 5 minutes late classed as being on time???

When I was at school not once did I receive 137% in a test, there was no such thing and I still don't think there is???

I am sure the western line is the only line that has six car trains that run during peak hour???

The amount of times I have travelled during this six month period and have had to stand all the way from Wentworthville, Westmead or Parramatta, had to put up with late running services, services that just dont turn up on non air conditioned trains.
