

Michael Stephenson
29/03/2006

Cityrail Fare Review

I write to object to an increase in fares on the CityRail network. CityRail have done nothing to improve their service levels or their reliability in order to justify such an increase. The only thing they have done is make the trains run slower and re-define what a 'late' train is.

CityRail need to rethink their entire pricing model not just gradually increase costs - we need an integrated ticketing system across all modes of public transport. Preferably with a zoned system such as the one in Melbourne - which makes for a simpler and more user friendly system and would be therefore more likely to be used.

Thanks,

Michael Stephenson
Wollongong